

Industry Compliance

Did you know?

As a creditor, you share in the liability on actions taken by your agency or attorney.

Why is a Corporate Compliance Officer important?

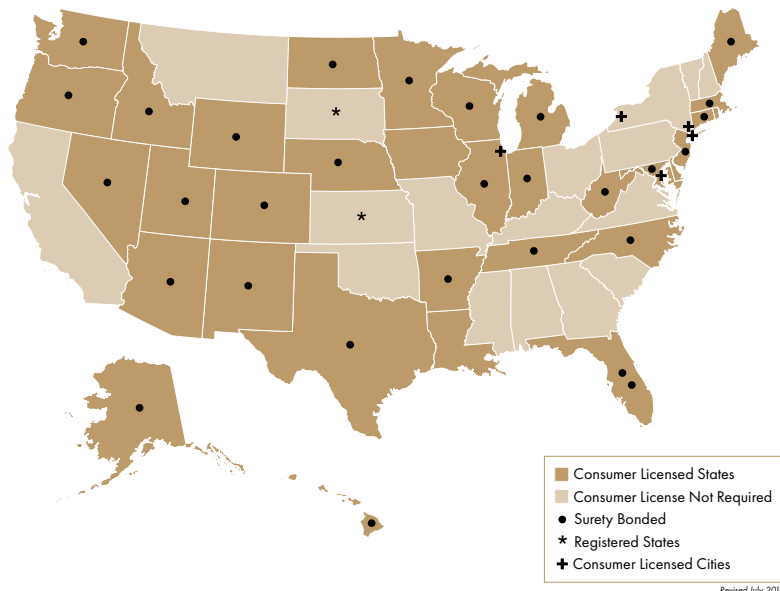

Our Corporate Compliance Officer monitors the ever-changing state and federal collection industry laws; educates our clients on these changes and oversees Hunter Warfield's adherence to the current rules and regulations.

Why is an in-house Attorney important?

Our General Counsel is our first line of defense against consumer complaints and litigation. The initial case/dispute review is completed at no cost to you. Our legal team settles a majority of litigation before court - saving you time, money and frustration.

Why is licensing important?

Hunter Warfield is licensed and bonded nationwide (where required) which allows us to collect within all 50 states – wherever your consumers move. Requirements vary by license and can include: review of financial details on the entity and the principals of the company, background checks and examinations.
